

The

AMERICAN

Dream

UP your game and build a story that wins you a university place in the USA

What makes this workshop so critical now?

For the last several years I have been interviewing Stanford applicants. Many of them are international students attending private schools in Wales. More recently I have been interviewing an increasing number of applicant from state schools. This series of workshops will equip all students to perform at a competitive level.

In this workshop, learners will build the skills, confidence and stories they need to navigate the American university interview Process.

This action packed training is full of thought provoking exercises, games and other challenges that support more powerful ways of thinking. Character, commitment and contribution are all examined in a quest to stand out. And if learners feel they have no story to tell this workshop is the perfect way to find it.

If you have ever wanted to study in America and wonder how to ace the interview process then this workshop is for you!

The course will cover:

- Practicing interview role play
- Thinking powerfully
- Shaping experience
- Explaining yourself

Learning outcomes:

By the end of the course, learners will know:

- What to do on a daily basis to up their game
- What to say when asked, "Tell me about yourself"
- What most interviewers are really looking for
- Which of their life experiences actually matter in telling their story
